Content

This programme is practice-led and process-oriented in relation to definitions of broad design practices. It is also committed to the acquisition of principles within design theory relating to educational and commercial contexts. The programme provides rigorous methods for the interrogation of visual and textual research, posing questions relating to the role of the designer in society, and fundamental questions regarding personal and social responsibility.

Students can explore their individual specialisms in the areas of photography, illustration and graphic design, should they wish to do so.

You can exit after Stage 1 with PgCert Communication Design.

You can exit after Stage 2 with PgDip Communication Design.
