The BSc Sport Development degree at UWS prepares you to drive positive social change through sport and physical activity. You'll gain a solid foundation in sport development, learning how to promote social inclusion, improve health, and engage communities.

With a global, interdisciplinary approach, the programme blends physical activity with insights from sociology, psychology, and business to address key social challenges such as reducing youth crime, addressing health inequalities, and reducing educational attainment gaps. This equips you to create adaptable, impactful initiatives across diverse cultural contexts.

Practical experience is central, with opportunities for work placements, internships, and community projects. The diverse skill sets developed through the course allows graduates to pursue roles in community sport management, sport and health policy advisory, event coordination, and grass-roots coaching.
