Content

This Masters degree examines the history, context and development of key debates around gender, sexuality and identity, exploring commonalities and differences in the ways they have played out in a range of contemporary, historical and global cultures.

Through core modules like Understanding Gender, Researching Gender and Key Feminist Thinkers, you'll explore a range of theoretical and methodological approaches for studying gender. You'll also delve into the ways in which academic debate informs, is shaped by and is at times distanced from how gender actually 'works' in true situations.

The course places the application of learning to real-world contexts at the heart of its teaching. You'll have the opportunity to apply your learning on a research placement. The course team has established links with potential placement providers from the third sector, as well as with a number of organisations who are committed to gender equality as part of their work in arts, culture and sport.

You can exit after stage 1 with PgCert Gender Studies (Applied).

You can exit after stage 2 with PgDip Gender Studies (Applied).
