Content

This vocational housing course is a key part of the Chartered Institute of Housing's educational programme. It's aimed at level 4 housing professionals who have been working in the Housing Sector, in either the public or private sectors. The course is also beneficial to employees aspiring to work at supervisory levels.

The course is essential for: Giving you an extensive range of knowledge and skills that are practical in nature; and Enabling you to reflect critically on housing policy and practice.

The course combines theory and practice so that you can apply the things you learn to benefit organisational practice. This serves to promote organisational commitments to best value, with housing services being subject to continuous improvements.

The present course programme contains a total of six modules. Finally and very importantly, the course prepares employees for further study and progression to courses at undergraduate level, that assist employees aspiring to jobs in management roles.
