Content

This course enables you to understand in more depth how law interacts with society. You will develop even further the intellectual skills needed for what is a demanding yet rewarding subject. These include autonomy, determination, intellectual curiosity, clear thinking and concise expression. All are highly valuable, whatever career you pursue.

Although the LLB is the degree to pursue if you wish to join the legal profession, the BA Business Law offers a strong in-depth knowledge of the law, enhancing many personal and intellectual skills to allow you to enter many different areas of employment.

In the first two years you will focus on the law of Scotland and the UK in Public Law and Commercial Law, as well as the law of Scotland in the law of obligations and criminal law. The University's modular system also allows you to dip into other areas of study for your first two years, such as languages, management, economics, criminology, psychology, politics, the environment and much more before concentrating on a wide range of law honours modules in 3rd and 4th year. This gives BA students the great advantage of a diverse and varied education and the ability to place legal studies in a wider social or business context.
