Content

You will experience engaging and varied learning activities, including practical research projects and discussions on real-world psychological theories and concepts. You'll explore areas like individual and social behaviour, gaining insight into how psychology applies to everyday life. This course encourages critical thinking, collaborative learning, and independent study, offering a supportive environment to develop both academic and personal skills.

Taught through blended delivery. Each week, learners will have one two-hour class in College and one two-hour session for directed self-study in which they will complete classwork.

This qualification is not exam based and instead is continually assessed throughout the year. All units should be passed for successful completion.
