

History (Combined)

University of Strathclyde

Content

The past is fascinating and knowing about it is essential to an understanding of the present and/or the various uses that people make of history for their own ends. Studying history at Strathclyde will give you a good understanding of these problems, and will also teach you important skills in research methods, interpretation, analysis, problem-solving and communication. This training makes our graduates excellent candidates for a wide range of professions that require intellectual flexibility and analytical skill.

History may be studied until third year as one of the Principal Subjects in a BA pass degree. Nevertheless, most history students go on to read for Single or Joint Honours, and History combines well with a range of other Arts and Social Sciences subjects (possible combinations below).
