Content

First Year: Students will follow introductory courses in Economics, Accounting, Finance, and Management. An introductory mathematics module is also taken. In addition, students may take an elective module from a wide range of subjects including Legal Method, Information Skills, and Modern Languages.

Second Year: Students are introduced to the formal theory of economics. Intermediate Economics covers core microeconomic and macroeconomic models. You also study quantitative methods, as well as two management modules from a range of options including business law, HRM, marketing, organisational behaviour, and operations management.

Third Year: Modules studied this year count towards the final degree classification. Students must complete an econometrics project, as well as take a module in advanced economics and a management module of their choice. In addition, students select four elective modules.

Fourth Year: Students will take modules in the core subjects of Economics and Management. A required number of modules must be taken from each subject area. Students may also take modules from other disciplines with a wide range of subjects available including Company Law, Finance, Logistics, and Marketing.
