Content

MA (Hons) Applied Modern Languages and Translating at Heriot-Watt University allows you to study two languages to degree level and spend a year abroad on placement with two of their partner universities, where you will be immersed in your studied languages and cultures. You can choose two languages from: Chinese, French, German and Spanish.

This four-year degree will focus on practical language skills, communication studies, cultural studies, and linguistics/translation studies. You'll be provided with opportunities to explore and develop links with potential employers, which will prepare you for employment in a variety of language-related careers. You'll develop a critical understanding of the main theories, concepts and principles relating to the study of languages, including interpreting, and translating. You'll be introduced to interpreting state-of-the-art booths which mirror the United Nations and European Parliament, and master translation skills in our language labs which use professional computer-assisted translation tools.
