

Vehicle Salesperson

A vehicle salesperson sells new cars and buys and sells second hand cars, motorcycles and vans.

The Work

You could be:

- greeting customers and discussing what type of car they want
- telling customers about the features of various vehicles
- arranging test drives and accompanying customers on them
- arranging terms of sale — this can involve discussing complicated financial options
- negotiating trade-in price for the customer's old vehicle
- telling the customer about any optional extras such as after sales service or accessories
- doing a final inspection of the vehicle and checking paperwork before delivery
- buying second hand cars at auctions or advertising in trade journals
- maintaining presentation of the showroom forecourt.

Pay

The figures below are only a guide. Actual pay rates may vary, depending on:

- where you work
- the size of the company or organisation you work for
- the demand for the job.

As a vehicle salesperson you could start off earning between £20,000 and £22,000 a year. With experience it could rise to £35,000 to £60,000 a year. There is normally a basic salary and you can earn more through bonus schemes and commission on sales. A company car is normally included.

Conditions

- You will work in showrooms and offices, but will demonstrate cars outdoors.
- You work around 40 hours a week but have to work evenings and weekends, the busiest trading times.
- You will probably have to meet sales targets every month.
- Your pay will vary because some of it will be from commission on sales.

Getting In

- You do not need formal qualifications but a good general education is useful. Customer service skills are more important.
- You need a clean driving licence.
- Sales experience from any industry is useful.

What Does It Take

You should be:

- interested in and knowledgeable about the product you are selling
- an excellent communicator
- smartly presented
- persuasive and a good negotiator
- self-confident and outgoing
- self-motivated and determined
- able to do calculations, complete paperwork and keep accurate records
- able to stay calm when working under pressure to meet sales targets.

Training

- Training is mostly on the job.
- You could study for the SVQ in Retail (Sales Professional) at SCQF Level 6.

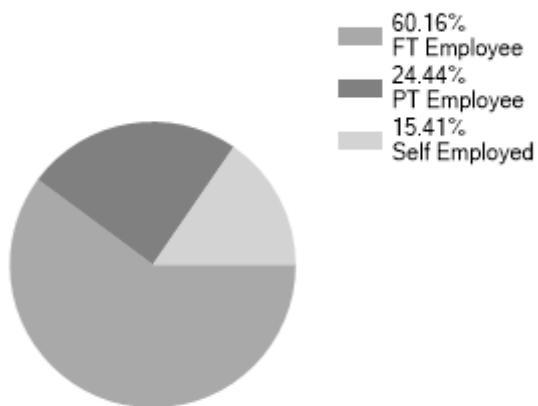

Getting On

- Promotion may depend on your sales record.
- In larger companies you can move into sales management and then into general management.
- Some car salespersons become self-employed.
