

Parking Attendant or Traffic Warden

Parking attendants, which were previously called traffic wardens, make sure that traffic, motoring and parking rules are followed. They patrol the streets, or car parks, to check on parked vehicles.

The Work

Parking attendants usually work for a local authority or for a private company contracted to the local authority.

You could be:

- patrolling an area, checking traffic movements and looking for illegally parked vehicles
- taking photographs of parking offences and using a handheld computer to issue 'penalty charge notices' (parking tickets) for illegally parked vehicles
- directing drivers and pedestrians and advising on parking areas
- giving evidence in court if required
- informing the police of parking offences that cannot be enforced by a parking attendant
- completing forms, making accurate notes and sometimes writing reports
- checking parking meter tickets and patrolling local authority car parks to check that drivers have 'paid and displayed'
- sometimes arranging for vehicles to be towed away, if they have been abandoned, illegally parked or are blocking traffic
- reporting any parking meters, signs or road markings that need maintenance.

Pay

The figures below are only a guide. Actual pay rates may vary, depending on:

- where you work
- the organisation you work for
- the demand for the job.

Pay rates for parking attendants vary but range from around £10.0 to £11.50 an hour. You might also get a shift allowance, opportunities for overtime and a performance bonus for issuing a certain quota of tickets. You are provided with a uniform and protective wet weather clothing.

Conditions

- You report to the office at the start and end of each shift, but you will be outdoors in all weathers.
- You will work a 35 to 40 hour week, in shifts, probably on a rota basis including: early mornings, possibly late evenings, Saturdays and, in some areas, Sundays.
- You will cover several miles a day (sometimes in a vehicle).
- You will carry and operate a handheld computer and a camera.
- You will be provided with a uniform.
- You may face some hostility from the public.

Getting In

- You do not need formal qualifications, but a good general education is useful.
- Previous experience working in a customer services role may be beneficial.
- You may have to take an entry test, including writing skills, and possibly numerical skills.
- You usually need to know the local area you will be patrolling.
- You might need a driving licence.
- You should have knowledge of the Highway Code.
- It is helpful if you have experience working with the public.
- You should be fit enough to cover several miles a day, perhaps up to 15.

Jobs are often with local authorities. These positions are advertised on myjobscotland website.

What Does It Take

You need to be:

- good at communicating with a wide range of people
- observant
- assertive, but not aggressive
- polite, helpful and tactful
- able to deal with difficult situations and stay calm under pressure
- honest and reliable
- able to work alone or as part of a team.

Training

- Training is usually on the job under the supervision of other staff. This will include learning traffic regulations, and completing and issuing parking fines.
- You might take some parking qualifications offered by the British Parking Association.

Getting On

With experience, you may be able to become a supervisor, manager, or trainer.
