

Dance Movement Psychotherapist

Dance movement psychotherapists help people to deal with a range of issues by using movement and dance. These might be physical or emotional problems. They work with a broad range of people of all ages, in individual or group sessions.

The Work

You could be:

- working with people who have emotional problems, learning difficulties, or physical or mental illness
- watching the movements of clients to assess their current state
- planning a routine of movements based on the clients' needs
- choosing the right interaction techniques, such as role play
- selecting music and props for sessions
- giving therapy sessions and helping clients work through their issues
- monitoring clients' progress and updating records
- working with colleagues and other health professionals.

Pay

The figures below are only a guide. Actual pay rates vary considerably depending on:

- whether you are freelance or employed
- the size of the company or organisation you work for
- the competition for posts.

If you are a Dance movement psychotherapist working with the NHS, the salary is usually based on the NHS Agenda for Change pay rates. You would start on Band 6, £43,169 to £52,603 a year.

With experience this can rise to Band 7, £52,769 to £61,377 a year. The current pay scales are from April 2025.

Outside the NHS your income would vary according to whether you were freelance or employed. This can range from £40 to £60 an hour.

Conditions

- You may work in health, education, community settings or private practice.
- Self-employed freelance and part time work is common.
- This work can be emotionally and physically demanding.
- Sessions usually take place during the day, but evening work can be common.

Getting In

- Firstly, you need a degree in a relevant subject, such as dance, performing arts, psychology or nursing.

Entry onto degree courses usually requires 4-5 Highers or a relevant HND.

- You then need to complete a Masters level degree that is accredited by the Association for Dance Movement Psychotherapy UK (ADMP UK).
- There are no accredited courses in Scotland at present. There are currently three trainings in the UK: Goldsmiths University (London), Roehampton University (London), and University of Derby. See ADMP UK website for information.
- Entry onto a Masters level degree course requires a relevant degree, two years' continuous experience of dance and movement and at least one year's relevant work experience which can be paid or voluntary (minimum of 200 hours). Check the website of the institution you are applying to for exact entrance requirements.
- You will usually have to undergo an interview and audition.
- Successful completion of the Masters degree allows you to register as a practitioner with ADMP UK.
- You will require a satisfactory criminal record check from Disclosure Scotland to show that you are suitable for this type of work. Contact Disclosure Scotland for details on the type you would need.
- A driving licence would be useful.

What Does It Take

You should have:

- creativity and imagination
- excellent communication skills, including listening
- experience in at least one form of movement or dance
- patience, resilience and emotional stability
- good observation skills
- the ability to motivate others
- an interest in the arts and its use in therapy
- an understanding of psychology, anatomy and physiology.

Training

- The ADMP UK runs a number of courses and conferences that count towards Continuing Professional Development (CPD). Some of these may take place in other parts of the UK.
- You need to complete a specified number of hours of CPD per year in order to keep your registration. As well as attending courses and conferences, this can include being involved in research and having papers or books published.

Getting On

- With 2 years' experience and completion of at least 300 hours of supervised clinical practice, you can become a member of the ADMP UK Register of Private Practitioners. If you complete an accredited supervision course, you can apply to join the Register of Clinical Supervisors, which allows you to teach and monitor other psychotherapists' work. This involves completing an application, having it approved by a qualified supervisor and meeting other requirements. The ADMP UK website has details.
- You may become self-employed and work in private practice. This requires you to be on both the Register of Private Practitioners and the Register of Supervisors, although you do not need to complete the supervisor training.

- You may go on to work as a consultant or into management.
